Thomas Alva Edison was born in Milan, Ohio, in 1847, and grew up in Port Huron, Michigan. He attended school for only three months. His mother taught him reading, writing, and arithmetics.

Edison's greatest inventions included an improved telephone, the phonograph, the motion-picture camera, and electric storage batteries. He is best remembered for inventing a long-lasting light bulb.

In the 1870s, many inventors were trying to make a practical light bulb. Edison tried hundreds of schemes. Finally he found a filament (thin thread) made of carbon. An electric spark made the filament glow inside a glass tube. Edison's incandescent lamp was a great success. It burned steadily for more than 40 hours.

Edison wanted people to have electric light in their homes, so he built the first electric power plants.

People liked Edison because he was a down-to-earth man. His favorite saying was, “Genius is 1 percent inspiration and 99 percent perspiration.”

Everybody needs a little tender, loving care — even planet Earth! Earth Day reminds us that we need to preserve the Earth's beauty and natural resources. Earth Day is celebrated every year on April 22.

Earth Day started on college campuses in 1970. Gaylord Nelson, a senator from Wisconsin, had inspired the efforts of college students. A lot of people felt the environment was in real trouble in 1970. Human beings were the cause of much of the trouble.

Accidental spills from oil tankers had poured millions of gallons of oil into the Gulf of Mexico. The oil polluted the water and harmed sea life.

Poisonous mercury was found in fish and wildlife in many states in the United States. For example, Ohio banned fishing in polluted Lake Erie because eating the fish was dangerous to human health. No sea life existed off the polluted shores of New York and New Jersey.

Heavy gray smog hung over America's cities. The destruction of rainforests and other habitats endangered thousands of animal and plant species around the globe.

People need to wake up and learn what they are doing to their planet!

Câu 41 – 45. Đọc bài dưới đây và trả lời vắn tắt các câu hỏi từ 41 đến 45.

Clouds are made of small drops of water or tiny pieces of ice. The water and ice in clouds come from the Earth's surface, especially from lakes, rivers, and oceans. When water on the surface evaporates, it changes into a gas called water vapor. Water vapor goes up into the air.

The higher up you go, the colder the air gets. When water vapor gets cold, it changes back into drops of water. If it gets cold enough, the water changes to ice.

The water droplets and bits of ice are so small that they float on the wind. You see the water and ice in the sky as clouds. Strong winds and gentle breezes make different kinds of clouds.

Meteorologists (scientists who study weather) group clouds into four families. Three families are called high clouds, middle clouds, and low clouds. These three families form at three different levels in the sky. The fourth family is made up of towering clouds that go up through the three levels. Meteorologists have grouped about 100 types of clouds into these four families.

41. What are clouds made of? 41.
 42. Where does water vapor go? 42.
 43. When cold enough, what does water vapor become? 43.
